

Abstract Of The Disclosure

A method and a device for activating an electromagnetic consumer having a movable element, in particular a solenoid valve for controlling the metering of fuel into an internal combustion engine. Within a time window, a switching instant at which the movable element reaches a certain position is determined. The duration of the time window can be defined so that the current flowing through the consumer during the time window does not exceed a threshold value.

00000000000000000000000000000000